

JOB DESCRIPTION

The Economics Department of Constantin College of the University of Dallas is seeking a tenure-track assistant professor with a quantitative economics background to complement our existing humanities-oriented faculty. The department seeks a candidate who can teach econometrics and foundational economics courses such as microeconomics, macroeconomics, and statistics. It would also be desirable to have a specialty field, such as International, Public Finance, or Economic History. Background or interest in liberal arts would be an advantage.

We seek candidates with a commitment to excellent teaching in a liberal arts setting, and with potential for high-quality scholarship. The successful candidate should have a PhD. All applications should go directly to the University of Dallas at <https://hr.udallas.edu/apply/> As the “Catholic university for independent thinkers,” UD welcomes students and faculty from different backgrounds.

Start date is Fall 2019

PRIMARY RESPONSIBILITIES

- ✓ Teach undergraduate economics
- ✓ Be actively engaged in research that will lead to publications
- ✓ Share in undergraduate advising
- ✓ Participate in service to the department and university by serving on committees and such as needed
